BROWN BREAD SANDWICHES

La famiglia buonanotte is an intelligent, sometimes dark, comedy that has many poignant moments about immigrant italian life in 1950's canada. The young boy who narrates some of the story makes the audience truly appreciate his desire to belong in this new country, and his attempts to fit in are often very funny. The rest of the family and its tenants downstairs play a precarious game of survival in a cramped household that breeds insecurity, competition and downright cattiness. Kim cattrall is wonderfully amusing as a dissatisfied wife who tries to disrupt everyone's life. Kim coates is hilarious as her blustering, loudmouth husband. Giancarlo giannini turns in a subtle yet charming performance as a man who resigns himself to his lot in life. La famiglia buonanotte has some wonderful moments that are both funny and touching because they reveal only too well the truth about life and love.

A great director, first, is highly intelligent. And he is also a dedicated and willing to work hard. Now those are easy things to identify. The third is the creativity, and that is very difficult to identify in advance. This is why so many of the directors who have started with me were my assistant - the first one was Francis Ford Coppola.

"Film is the medium of the single transformational event, and that's the most engaging and inspiring kind of story for us. By weaving a tale of a character's most fundamental challenges through a gauntlet that leaves them a different person than they were at the outset, a film allows audiences all over the world to experience an identical event. Stories can bind people together, and in that way, film has the ability to bind us all together."
